Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., June 12 — Darwin R. Labarthe, president of the class of '61 at Princeton University, was awarded the two highest honors his classmates can confer in Class Day ceremonies here this afternoon.

Mr. Labarthe, who comes from Honolulu, was cited as the senior who had done the most for his class and the most for the university. He was also awarded the Harold W. Dodds achievement award as the student "who best embodies the high examples set by Dr. Dodds during his tenure as university president."

Frederic P. Kreisler of Pelham Manor, N. Y., received the Phi Beta Kappa award for the highest academic ranking. The class will graduate tomorrow morning.

Meanwhile, four men, including Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, were named to the university's board of trustees. Mr. Dulles, a 1914 graduate of Princeton, was elected a charter trustee. He will be inducted next fall.

George H. Love of Pittsburgh, chairman of the Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Company, and John B. Coburn, dean of the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Mass., were also elected charter trustees. W. Paul McBride, a partner in the Chicago banking concern of Brent, McBride & Thorne, was elected a term trustee.
